According to the lawsuit, following an argument, he had imprisoned her at his house, threatened her, and touched her improperly.

Before giving the police more time to question him while he was in detention, the Alipore court heard arguments from the defense and the police.

The judge remanded Adhikary to police detention until February 16 after seeing the gravity of the accusations and noting that the inquiry was still in its early stages.

Police also informed the court that the woman's medical checkup was still pending and that her statement before a magistrate had not yet been recorded.

The complaint was first filed by the police under several provisions of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita (BNH), including criminal intimidation, wrongful imprisonment, physical assault, and outrage of a woman's dignity.

However, a rape charge was eventually added following additional interrogation and a review of preliminary results.

Advocates Moyukh Mukherjee, Gopal Halder, Subrata Sardar, Barun Kanti Som, Prasenjit Halder, and Chandril Chattopadhyay represented the complainant.
