Concerning the Legal Journal of Technology

Law students from National Law Universities (NLUs) throughout India manage the student-run platform known as the Legal Journal on Technology (TLJT). With an emphasis on the nexus between law and technology, TLJT has emerged as a significant voice in the legal community in just five years. TLJT is a 35-person team that conducts research and talks on topics such as digital rights, technology policy, and cyber law. For academics, professionals, and students wishing to make a contribution to this quickly developing field of law, it acts as a central location.

Concerning Scriboard

Top-ranked legal firm Scriboard is well-known for its outstanding proficiency in data protection, IT, TMT (Technology, Media, and Telecommunications), and intellectual property. With a clientele that includes world-renowned business titans in fields like banking, e-commerce, and social networking, Scriboard is adept at handling intricate legal requirements with ease. Their services, which are centered on intellectual property management, IT compliance, and information security, guarantee that clients can carry on with their creative activity uninterrupted. The firm has played a significant role in negotiating the legal issues presented by the digital age, under the leadership of Mr. Rodney D. Ryder.

Concerning the Event

TLJT is thrilled to launch one of the largest Tech-Law Article Writing Competitions to date, in association with Scriboard! In order to compete for a ?35,000 grand prize pool (which will be split among the top four), internships for the top five, publications, and certificates of merit, this competition asks scholars, professionals, and law students to submit essays on the newest developments in technology law.

Qualifications

students studying law at the undergraduate or graduate levels.
Scholars and legal practitioners interested in technology law.
Any student studying computer science may co-author an entry; there can be no more than two authors.
