Was the CLAT 2026 paper leaked? Videos and pictures are shared online

A post that was pinned to the top of the Telegram group said that people who paid would get the paper and answer key in their personal chat.

There are pictures and videos going around the internet of a Telegram group called "CLAT Exam 2026," which makes it look like the Common Law Admission Test (CLAT) 2026 test was leaked.

"Paid valo ko personal mai Paper + Answer Key de di hai" (people who paid got the paper and answer key in their personal chat).

Messages that have been changed are marked with a "edited" label in Telegram. There is no banner like this in the CLAT Exam 2026 group's posts.

While some social media users called for a new look and investigation, others said the messages were fake and said there are many ways to change the dates of messages and photos that have already been sent on these kinds of public groups.

Bar & Bench has asked the CLAT Consortium what they think about the supposed paper leak on December 12. At the time of publication of this story, no answer has been received.
